Expanding Your Academic Support Center Services To Meet The Complex Needs Of Today's Students

Thursday, February 13 ~ 1:00-2:30pm (Eastern)

Once the live date has passed, this training will be available on demand.

Overview

The Kortschak Center for Learning and Creativity was designed to meet the learning and creativity needs of students that learn differently. The Kortschak Model, by design, can reach more of the general student body population's growing needs.

The Kortschak Model delivers academic coaching and a variety of other academic support services and resources through the theoretical approaches of Occupational Therapy, Marriage and Family Therapy, Educational Counseling, Psychology and Public Administration, and Student Affairs. Due to the dynamic nature of these therapeutic approaches, the Kortschak Center is a robust Academic Support Center that can provide meaningful academic support interventions and services while remaining collaborative, although independent, with the Student Counseling Center on campus. At the Kortschak Center, the focus remains on academic support skill development with opportunities to delve into topics such as stress management, mindfulness, sleep hygiene, and self-care.

This webinar will outline the development of a multidisciplinary academic support center; structure and design of the center; the advantages of employing Occupational Therapy trainees in your center; on-going training curriculum; resources and implementation of various topics in one-on-one and group settings; working with students with ADHD and other learning differences; assessment strategies for measuring impact of services; engaging faculty to be better allies for students with disabilities.

Objectives:

- Identify how their institution or student body is altering what services they are asking for
- Analyze resources available to them, from their campus and surrounding communities
- Identify new potential resources and partnerships
- Discuss ways to approach campus partners to implement pilot programs aligned with health and wellness initiatives on their campus
- Explore the benefits of having occupational therapists in academic settings

Who Should Attend?

Speaker(s)

Julie Loppacher brings nearly two decades of experience to the field academic support in higher education. Throughout her career, Julie has worked tirelessly to ensure that structures were in place to support students in meeting their goals. Julie currently serves as the Director of the Kortschak Center for Learning and Creativity at the University of Southern California. Prior to arriving at USC, Julie was the Assistant Dean for Academic Resources and Services at Scripps College, in Claremont California, where she worked primarily with international students and students with documented disabilities. However, it was during her tenure as the Assistant Director for Academic Advising and Support Programs at Emory University that Julie, along with some colleagues, began to recognize the changing needs of students and how much benefit they would see from an academic coaching program established on a robust training curriculum. Throughout the years Julie's programs and tutors have been award winners from both the Association for the Coaching and Tutoring Profession and the National Collegiate Learning Center Association. Julie currently resides in Santa Monica, California with her amazing dog, Teton.
